Drinking? Drugs? Sex? ‘Grown-ish’ Has It All

Drugs, new friendships, lust for the boy two seats down (and balancing said lust with an equal lust for the boy two seats down from the boy two seats down). These are some of the issues challenging students on a residential campus.

Those looking for a discussion on the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act will be disappointed. Those looking for a Hollywood perspective on student affairs may enjoy the show.

This is the ABC spin-off of the Emmy-nominated sitcom Black-ish, with one of the series’ breakout stars, Yara Shahidi, shining solo. For more information, click here.

A Brief History of Students Secretly Recording Their Professors

Back in 2006, as a young website called YouTube heralded a new age in amateur cinematography, students started posting videos of their professors lecturing — not because they were provocative, but because they were dull. "The boredom of lectures is a frequent theme," reported Inside Higher Ed, "with audio of a professor talking while students look bored — or in the case of one student at Southern Methodist University, fight a losing battle to stay awake."

Other students devoted themselves to capturing more-explosive content. That same year, Andrew Jones, a former student at the University of California at Los Angeles, created a website, UCLAprofs.com, aimed at exposing members of the faculty as political radicals. According to the Daily Bruin, Mr. Jones offered cash to students who agreed to supply him with recordings of certain suspected professors.

Professors started to be more careful about letting students record their lectures for reference. Some students didn’t ask permission. Smartphones became ubiquitous, making it difficult to tell who was recording what, and when. For more information, click here.

Sexual Harassment Leaves Lasting Emotional Scars

It seems these days, men are dropping off like flies. Their acts of wrong living have finally caught up with them.

Sexual harassment is nothing new. It didn’t just come on the scene recently. Women and some men have been victims of sexual abuse for years and have not fought back. Their voices remained silent while their minds were crying out.

However, in recent years more women have become empowered and emboldened. For more information, click here.

Integrity and Citizenship Award Fall 2017

The Office of Student Conduct would like to congratulate Rhett Adams and Leah Steward for receiving the Life Core Proficiency Integrity and Citizenship Award.

The first of the Core Proficiencies at Life University is Integrity and Citizenship. Life University embraces the notion that integrity is not a state, rather that it is a daily striving, a struggle to reach closer to the highest ideals despite pressure to retreat to the lower levels that result in complaints, investigations, hearings and sanctions. This results in a community based on mutual respect.

Life University and the Office of Student Conduct thank you for your leadership in this vital area.
