

Life University's Policy Statement on Informed Consent

It is the position of Life University that informed consent is an ethical principle in all health practices, and by definition, it implies a choice. Since all medical procedures, including vaccinations, have the potential to cause injury, informed consent is an ethical imperative. In light of this position, all vaccination programs should include informed consent, freedom of choice and personal exemptions without force, duress or coercion.